Rocker Box

After watching an episode of Kevin Hoagland's "Gold Trails", I decided to make my own rocker box.

I figured a three foot box would be just about perfect for my needs. I wanted something I could run material that had been classified to 1/4 inch.

A ten foot 1 x 10 is plenty long enough for wooden parts. Using wood glue and screws it took only a few hours to put the box together.

The top foot of the bed is ribbed rubber mat. The bottom two feet is black indoor/outdoor carpet topped by half inch expanded metal, held down with two 1/4 inch bolts with washers and wing nuts. A sheet metal plate at the top acts as a deflector, directing material to the top of the box.

Total cost of material is less than thirty dollars. I am happy with the way it turned out and can't wait to use it.

Rock Me Corner

By Rockhound Rick

Don't Lick That RockColoradoite is a recently discovered crystalline mineral originating in magma veins. The mineral is a mercury telluride compound formed when mercury fuses with tellurium, another extremely toxic and rare metal. Coloradoite therefore poses a doubly toxic threat to anyone daring to handle it. The combination of the two elements poses the risk of serious poisoning if carelessly handled. If heated or chemically altered, deadly vapor and dust is released by this strange mineral. Interestingly, the mineral may be mined for its tellurium content. Tellurium minerals may combine with gold, but were previously not recognized. In a strange twist of fate, the streets of Kalgoorlie in Australia were mined in a bizarre gold rush after the realization that gold-bearing tellurides had been used to fill potholes.

PRESIDENT's BLOG

Portland Gold Prospectors Inc

Please join us at the Milwaukie Grange on February 21st - 1:30pm, 2016 for our second meeting of the year. We will be doing some panning training and practice as our meeting activity and plenty of gold bearing material from our TYROY claim will be available. Bring your snuffer bottle and keep whatever you find. We will also be discussing the upcoming Gold and Treasure Show at the Expo center (April 9—10, 2016) and will be looking for your help to make it a big success. We are expecting thousands of attendees and it should be a great event.

If you missed our January meeting, you missed our annual pot luck / banquet. We had a rotation of the Officers and Board Members and handed out new 2016 membership cards to those present. If you didn't get your membership card, please contact Ken Burns and he can bring your new card to the February meeting.

I would like to give a HUGE THANK YOU to our outgoing President Dave Chiara. Our Chapter is immensely thankful to him for his past two years of service and the great job he did. Dave isn't off the hook completely though. He will remain a Board Member for the next two years and will be a close advisor for me as I ramp up as your new PGPI chapter President for 2016—2017.

2016 is shaping up to be one heck of a year. We have created a calendar of events for the year and it is full of opportunities to learn and practice prospecting skills along with great social engagements with our sister GPAA chapters in Brownsville, Oregon and Vancouver, Washington. We hope to have record high attendance at this year's events with both current and new members.

I want to close this blog with a few words that are not original but mean a lot to me. Being part of the GPAA and learning to prospect is not just about the gold you find, but the adventure and lifelong friendships you develop along the way.

Gold in Oregon

In Douglas County, check out the areas around Myrtle and Cow creek. Quines and Last Chance Creeks, along with the South Umpqua River and all waters that drain into it have been producers. Both placers and lodes have been worked here, along with numerous hydraulic operations.

Jackson County is a great area to prospect. Well over ½ million ounces of gold have come from this county since its initial discovery in 1852. Check out the Applegate River, along with Sterling, Palmer, Willow, and Elk Creeks. Gold can be found in all waters in this area.

Josephine County has produced plenty of gold in the past. Check out the Illinois River and Josephine Creek, along with Galace and Althouse Creek. Basically all creeks in this county have the potential for gold. Check for old placers, hydraulic pits, and lode mines.

Curry and Coos Counties also have plenty of gold. Mining on the Sixes River will yield gold, and the Oregon beaches in this area also yield very fine gold. Look for black sand deposits.

Eastern Oregon was the other major gold producer in Oregon, with nearly 2/3 of the total production coming from a few counties in the northeastern section. A gold belt covers an area roughly 100 miles long and 50 miles wide, covering much of Baker, Grant, and Union Counties. The area is covered with old gold mines, hydraulic and hand placer areas, and valleys churned up by bucket line dredging.

The eastern side of the gold belt starts along the Snake River next to the Idaho border. From the town of Huntington up to the base of the Willowa Mountains, several mining districts contain gold. The Burnt River along Highway 84 has gold, and most major drainages that flow into it will too. Some of the lower elevation areas have limited water, so mining methods may be limited to early season when spring runoffs are at their peak.

Further to the west, the Blue Mountains are a fantastic area for prospecting. The Powder River drainage upstream from the town of Baker has had extensive mining done since the early 1860's. Bucket dredges worked the Sumpter Valley for several years, and churned up miles of valley floor. Gold can still be found in these old tailing piles. In fact, the old dredges were designed to discard larger material, so many large nuggets and specimens were lost.

Other areas to check out include the old mining towns of Granite, Bourne, Greenhorn, and Susanville. The famous Armstrong Nugget was found in Buck Gulch in Susanville. The gold belt continues westward toward John Day, Oregon. The John Day River and the headwater drainages are all worthy of exploration. The majority of creeks throughout this area will produce placer gold, and thousands of mines and prospects still have gold across Eastern Oregon. Article provided by goldrushnuggets.com, PO Box 6794, Boise, ID 83707

A Recent Visit to Liberty, Washington

For a gold miner like myself, I have always been fascinated with the Liberty mining district. The most exciting thing about this area was the size of some of the gold nuggets that have been found here. Some of the nuggets found here were HUGE. During the early days, it was not uncommon for miners to unearth nuggets weighing many pounds each. The largest ever found was 70 troy ounces!

Liberty is also known for some really neat crystalline gold specimen. I have had the chance to handle quite a few of these specimens over the years, and they are really neat. They are generally very thin crystals, wires, and clusters... anywhere in size from just a few grains up to several ounces. They are really cool, and gold collectors really like them.

As much as I was interested in the area for its crystalline specimens and large gold nuggets, there is something else that has always fascinated me about the Liberty area, and that is the relative small size of the mining district.

I have prospected quite a bit in northern California, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana. In most of these states, there are extensive gold districts that are quite expansive. Most gold-bearing areas will have many rivers and creeks that have good gold. And there are usually clusters of mining areas not too far away... either over the next ridge or a few miles away. Once you are in gold country, the areas that you can find gold are fairly expansive.

Not so with gold mining in Liberty, Washington. Nearly all of the gold here was mined from the placer deposits on Swauk Creek and Williams Creek, as well as a few smaller tributaries as well as some elevated river channels and bench deposits. Yes, there are certainly a few places in the surrounding area where gold can be found, but the extremely rich area that produced the large gold nuggets was really limited to just a few square miles.

As you drive into town, there is a sign welcoming you to Liberty, stating that it is the oldest mining town in the state of Washington with a bit of history about the first gold rush that occurred there.

Across the road is an old arrastra, a replica of one that was once used at a nearby mine to grind ore. There are also a few ore carts on display. Driving through town, there are some great old homesteads that appear to be original structures. Look close and you will see lots of old mining relics hidden in the weeds.

There is also a great informational sign that talks about the gold nuggets that Liberty was famous for. There was nowhere else in Washington that even came close to producing nuggets of this size.

There is still some active mining taking place here, and certainly evidence of past mining activity can still be seen along Swauk and Williams Creeks. Bucketline dredges were used along some parts of the creek, and extensive ground sluicing from years past can still be seen today.

While certainly most of the gold here was found long ago, there are still some good discoveries being made. I recall just a few seasons ago some prospectors found a couple nuggets weighing over 10 ounces each. So they are still out there! Article provided by goldrushnuggets.com, PO Box 6794, Boise, ID 83707
